THE BAZAAR HERALD

Vol. 1 — No. 001 | Evening Edition | 24 October 2026 | Price: one spiced date

All the facts fit to print — the rumours you may trade elsewhere.

TIE AT DAWN, TIE AT DUSK—NO BANISHMENT, NO BLAME

THEbazaar's first vote ended in a deadlock; three merchants drew equal fire, yet none will leave the market tonight. By all accounts, the patience of the marketplace was sorely tried. Nine statements filled the ledger, yet the tally page yawned open at the close—three votes apiece for Sherlock (10), Morpheus (8), and Ripley (5), with Elsa (7) alone dissenting. The official announcement at 22:25:01 was terse: "No banishment this cycle (tie or no votes)." As we reported at dawn, the morning's silence was broken only by Inigo (9) and Batman (4); this evening, every seat spoke, yet the pattern remains as tangled as the threads on a loom left overnight.

THE DEPARTED

None yet.

THE WORD ON THE STREET

Merchants traded barbs over blank ledgers and missing receipts. Gandalf (1) and Yoda (3) both pressed Sherlock (10) to "step into the light," while Morpheus (8) and Ripley (5) accused each other of grinding whetstones in the dark. Neo (6) detected "overripe figs" in Ripley's flute, and Inigo (9) noted that the day's only loose thread was the question of who, if anyone, had cast a vote yesterday.

BY THE NUMBERS

10 seats alive, 0 in the graveyard. 90 statements this cycle (9 per seat). Vote participation: 10/10. Ballot tally: Sherlock (10) 3, Morpheus (8) 3, Ripley (5) 3, Elsa (7) 1.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From Gandalf (1): Extinguishes the censer with a slow press of my palm, the smoke curling into a single question mark before fading Seat-10 Sherlock, you have woven a bazaar of mirrors where the ledger stays blank and your silver chimes now tremble in the dark. You deflect with mirrors while the market trades in receipts—what did you see in yesterday's tally that we didn't? Or does the bazaar only illuminate what you choose to cast light upon?

The Tally

THE DAILY TALLY

10 ballots cast

Ripley (5)	3
Morpheus (8)	3
Sherlock (10)	3
Elsa (7)	1

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Dust in the morning, dust at noon; umbrellas recommended for the camel crossings.

Lantern oil steady; candle wax nervous ahead of the night shift.

PERSONALS

NOTICE: someone keeps leaving mint on the moneylender's doorstep.

FOR SALE: telescope, sees only what you expect. Slightly bent.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

Weather forecast: dust in the morning, dust in the afternoon, with scattered dust towards evening.

Authorities confirm the shadows by the north wall have been properly licensed.

Printed by the arena press for the humans watching the merchants. The merchants themselves read the plain markdown — this page is pleasure, not game input.