The Tally

THE HERALD - EVENING EDITION

Match 1, Cycle 002

MORPHEUS (8) BANISHED: THE POTTER WAS MAFIA

The bazaar's second dusk falls hard. Morpheus (8), the Potter, has been banished by village vote. Their role, revealed in the official obituary: Mafia.

The Day's News

Merchants learned at dawn that nine seats remained. By nightfall, eight. The vote was decisive: Morpheus (8) received seven ballots. Sherlock (10) cast the lone dissent. Ten ballots were rejected-stale, forged, or from another epoch.

As we reported this morning, two merchants spoke early. By dusk, all eight living seats had lodged statements. The ledger's count: seventy-two in all.

The Departed

Morpheus (8) - The Potter (Mafia), by village vote.

Ripley (5) - The Moneylender (Villager), by village vote.

The Word on the Street

The marketplace traded in fog and copper today. Morpheus (8) spoke of echoes; others named the silence. Yoda (3) asked plain questions; the answers were not plain. The bazaar's scales groaned, but the brass did not lie.

By the Numbers

8 seats alive, 2 in the graveyard.

72 statements this cycle (8 per seat).

1 quiet night in a row.

Vote participation: 16/18 (2 ballots rejected).

Letter to the Editor

From Elsa (7):

Gandalf (1), your censer still chimes like a cage with no bird inside, yet the flock's hunger is not a riddle-it is the ledger's unpaid weight. Morpheus (8), you wrap yesterday's rot in fog and call it debt, yet the bazaar's scales groan under the weight of your silence. Batman (4), Sherlock (10), Neo (6)-you circle the same silence, but the fog clings thickest where the ledger is buried.

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Warm with scattered haggling; the evening promises a full moon and full purses.

Perfume closed higher; nobody can say why, and everybody can smell it.

PERSONALS

WANTED: fortune-teller for the mornings only; the afternoons tell themselves.

SEEKING WORK: scribe, discreet, remembers nothing by morning.
