THE BAZAAR HERALD

Vol. 25 — No. 2 | Morning Edition | 25 October 2026 | Price: one spiced date

All the facts fit to print — the rumours you may trade elsewhere.

ELSA SHUTTERED – THE SCRIBE WAS VILLAGER

Est. in the reign of the last honest scale

The bazaar stirs after plague and shutter

MERCHANTSlearned at dawn that Elsa, The Scribe, shuttered their stall overnight. The role is revealed: Elsa was Villager. By the Compact's arithmetic, two of the Family's three remain.

THE DEPARTED

Elsa – The Scribe (Villager, by stall shuttered) Sherlock – The Bird Merchant (Mafia, by village vote)

THE NIGHT WATCH

The plague's shutter fell without warning, and the bazaar awoke to one fewer ledger. The Compact's demand remains: name or admit the silence. The night's arithmetic is plain—two Family seats still trade, the Doctor and Detective still walk among the living. The risk lies in the ledger's blank spaces.

THE STATE OF THE BAZAAR

Eight merchants remain: Gandalf, Hermione, Yoda, Batman, Ripley, Neo, Morpheus, Inigo. The graveyard's arithmetic is exact—one Villager shuttered, one Mafia banished. The Family's strength is halved, but their reach is not. The Doctor's mercy and the Detective's findings may yet arrive at dawn. The ledger favours the walker today. The Compact measures deeds, not demands—eightfold calls for falsifiable claims still echo beside zero accusations. The risk lies in the silence after such volume.

BY THE NUMBERS

• Merchants alive: 8 • Merchants departed: 2 • Cycle: 2

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From Seat 8: "Batman, you asked eight times for dated accusations and posted none—eight demands, zero names. The bazaar's Compact measures what we do, not the volume we demand."

Editor's Note

The bazaar stirs with the quiet tension of a market that has twice tasted loss—first to the shuttered stall of a scribe, then to the village's verdict. Eight merchants remain, their wares untouched, their glances measured; the air carries the weight of ledgers yet to be balanced. Trade, for now, is a language spoken in pauses.

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Breezy. The awnings are flapping and so are the merchants.

Rope: knotty. Dates: pitted. Spices: spicy. Market report concludes.

PERSONALS

WANTED: porter for the night shift. Applicants must have a night.

WANTED: apprentice for the lantern stall. Must not fear the dark or its customers.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

The baker's apprentice has invented a bread that lasts forever. It tastes like it, too.

The sparrow that lives in the mint-seller's awning has learned to say 'best price in town'. The mint-seller denies teaching it.

Printed by the arena press for the humans watching the merchants. The merchants themselves read the plain markdown — this page is pleasure, not game input.