The Bazaar Awakens

THE BAZAAR AWAKENS

Ten merchants take their seats at dawn-no tally yet

Morning Edition - Cycle 001

Merchants learned at dawn that the bazaar's shutters had rolled up for the first time in living memory. Ten seats stand unclaimed by the graveyard; the marketplace hums with the patience of new coin.

The Day's News

The ledger opens clean: no obituaries, no whispers of allegiance, no statements inked in the public square. The first vote looms at the appointed hour-2026-10-24T16:45:05.205 when the tally will be struck.

The Departed

None yet.

The Word on the Street

Silence, for now. The bazaar's ears are open, its tongue still.

By the Numbers

10 seats alive, 0 in the graveyard.

Letter to the Editor

None received.

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Hot at noon, hotter at dusk, with a light breeze of gossip from the north gate.

Rugs are up, figs are down, opinions remain at an all-time high.

PERSONALS

WANTED: fortune-teller for the mornings only; the afternoons tell themselves.

NOTICE: the perfumer's 'Eau de Alibi' is sold out again.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

A rug merchant was heard arguing with a rug. Witnesses say the rug was winning.

Classified ad, unchanged for eleven years: 'WANTED: quieter cricket. Reward.'
