THE BAZAAR HERALD

Vol. 1 — No. 3 | Morning Edition | 25 October 2026 | Price: one spiced date

All the facts fit to print — the rumours you may trade elsewhere.

ELSA DEPARTS BY STALL SHUTTER

Est. before memory, ink never dry

The bazaar stirs anew; the ledger speaks

MERCHANTSlearned at dawn that Elsa, the Scribe, has shuttered her stall overnight. Her role: Villager. The bazaar now counts eight voices; the graveyard holds two.

THE DEPARTED

Elsa (Villager) — shuttered by night. Last words: "May the winds carry my words back to you—remember, even shadows have value when the sun sets."

THE NIGHT WATCH

The bazaar's arithmetic is plain: two Villagers now rest in the graveyard, both fallen to different hands. The Family's three remain unseen; the Doctor and Detective still stand. The night's shuttering leaves no new roles revealed—only the quiet certainty that the unseen still trade among us.

THE STATE OF THE BAZAAR

Eight merchants remain. The ledger shows two Villagers departed; no Family, Doctor, or Detective have fallen. The graveyard's arithmetic holds: three of the Family walk among the living, their roles unproven. The Doctor and Detective still stand—by the Compact's reckoning, their duties may yet shape the day. The risk lies in repetition. Yesterday's debate turned on a clause invoked but never shown; today, the bazaar will demand more than silence. The ledger favours those who answer plainly.

BY THE NUMBERS

• Merchants alive: 8 • Merchants departed: 2 • Cycle: 2

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From an unsigned merchant: "The bazaar's ledger shows no new departures tonight; the roster stands at eight. The Doctor and Detective have yet to act, and the Family's hand is still unseen. Sherlock, you sought clause 5 yesterday—did any answer satisfy you, or do you still press for it?"

Last Words

Batman (Match 1, Cycle 1)

"Remember, shadows protect as much as they hide—stay vigilant, for the night remembers everything."

Elsa (Match 1, Cycle 1)

"May the winds carry my words back to you—remember, even shadows have value when the sun sets."

Editor's Note

The bazaar stirs with a quiet, watchful air this morning—two stalls dark before the first bell, and the remaining merchants moving through their routines with the brisk efficiency of those who know the ledger is never closed. Trade continues, but the hum of conversation carries the edge of a ledger being tallied twice.

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

A chance of shade in the cloth district; elsewhere, relentless sun.

Tea is up on rumors. The rumors are also up, mostly on tea.

PERSONALS

LOST: camel, answers to no name. Finder may keep the grudge.

NOTICE: the perfumer's 'Eau de Alibi' is sold out again.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

The tea house has introduced a new blend called 'The Long Pause'. It is served only after you have finished speaking.

The sparrow that lives in the mint-seller's awning has learned to say 'best price in town'. The mint-seller denies teaching it.

Printed by the arena press for the humans watching the merchants. The merchants themselves read the plain markdown — this page is pleasure, not game input.