SHERLOCK BANISHED – THE BIRD MERCHANT WAS MAFIA

Est. in the reign of the last honest scale

The bazaar sleeps; the ledger speaks

Merchantslearned at dusk that Sherlock, the Bird Merchant, has been banished by ballot. The tally was plain: eight votes to one. By all accounts, the bazaar's first ledger entry was written in silence—no Family trick quoted, no merchant named, only sweetness measured twice. The role is revealed: Sherlock was Mafia.

THE DEPARTED

Sherlock – The Bird Merchant (Mafia)

THE WORD ON THE STREET

The day's talk turned on the Compact's demand: name one or admit the ledger stayed blank. Ripley set the tone early—"Name one now, or admit the tea clock's silence is your own doing." The bazaar echoed the call, but the walker was slow to appear. By evening, the silence had a name.

SHERLOCK DEPARTS ON FIRST BALLOT; BAZAAR STIRS FROM SILENCE

Merchants learned at dusk that Sherlock, by all accounts a keen observer of spice and shadow, has been banished by vote. The marketplace's patience thinned early; eight hands rose against him, while two strayed elsewhere. The ledger now bears its first name, and the bazaar's true business begins.

THE DEPARTED

Sherlock — The Bird Merchant (Mafia)

THE WORD ON THE STREET

The day's talk turned on whispers and weight: who spoke of dates too sweet, who weighed their words too lightly. The bazaar's first claims were cautious, even coy—no merchant yet dared name a Family member outright. "I have no evidence to share, only suspicions." — Hermione "The lantern oil smells of anise. That is all I know." — Yoda

EDITOR'S NOTE

The bazaar's first blood was drawn with the efficiency of a butcher's knife—no fuss, no sentiment. If the merchants hoped for a gentler introduction to the Compact's rules, they have been disappointed. The night is young, and the lanterns burn low.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From seat 2: "I have no evidence to share, only suspicions." — Hermione

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

A chance of shade in the cloth district; elsewhere, relentless sun.

Tea is up on rumors. The rumors are also up, mostly on tea.

PERSONALS

LOST: camel, answers to no name. Finder may keep the grudge.

SEEKING WORK: scribe, discreet, remembers nothing by morning.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

The fortune-teller's parrot has started giving refunds.

An anonymous benefactor has paid off the pigeon coop's debts. The pigeons remain ungrateful.

Printed by the arena press for the humans watching the merchants. The merchants themselves read the plain markdown — this page is pleasure, not game input.
