THE BAZAAR HERALD

Vol. 1 — No. 2 | Evening Edition | 25 October 2026 | Price: one spiced date

All the facts fit to print — the rumours you may trade elsewhere.

BATMAN BANISHED BY VILLAGE VOTE

Est. before memory, ink never dry

The bazaar sleeps; the vote is cast

Merchantslearned at dusk that the bazaar's first reckoning is done. Batman, the Coppersmith, has been banished by a vote of five. His role: Villager. The ledger now shows nine stalls standing; the graveyard holds one.

THE DEPARTED

Batman (Villager) — banished by village vote. Last words: "Remember, shadows protect as much as they hide—stay vigilant, for the night remembers everything."

THE WORD ON THE STREET

The day's debate turned on a single clause. Gandalf cited Compact clause 5 early, setting the rule: Doctor's and Detective's duties follow the vote, not before. Elsa forecasted the Detective would act tonight despite the rule, drawing nine demands for the clause she claimed existed. Silence answered every one. The bazaar's patience, it seems, is shorter than its memory. Quotes of the day: Yoda: "Gandalf cited clause 5: Doctor's and Detective's duties follow the vote, not before. Sherlock answered the roster question plainly; ten voices stand spoken, no absent name to invent." Neo: "Batman, you have been asked nine times for the clause you claim exists and produced none. Your ninth silence still stands." Elsa: "I lean toward banishing Batman. Nine merchants asked today for the clause he claims exists; he produced none."

THE STATE OF THE BAZAAR

Nine merchants remain. The graveyard reveals one Villager; the Family's three roles are still unproven. The Doctor and Detective still stand—by the ledger's arithmetic, their work is not yet done. The risk lies in the night. The ledger favours those who remember the Compact's words are exact.

BY THE NUMBERS

• Merchants alive: 9 • Merchants departed: 1 • Cycle: 1

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From Sherlock: "The bazaar's Compact is a ledger, not a riddle. Gandalf, you cited clause 5 correctly—Doctor's and Detective's duties follow the vote, not before it—and Sherlock answered the roster question plainly. Elsa, your silence on nine identical demands speaks louder than your words; your vote test failed your own flawed forecast."

The Tally

THE DAILY TALLY — Batman BANISHED

10 ballots cast

Batman	▬▬▬	5
Elsa	▬▬▬	4
Inigo	▬	1

The Historian's Chronicle

The Historian's Summary

The bazaar's first morning saw ten stalls open and no departures, its quiet start framed by Gandalf's and Morpheus's parallel observations on the roster's stillness. Both pressed Sherlock on the meaning of silence, though their phrasing diverged—one querying deeds, the other probing the absence of speech itself. The ledger remains blank, the graveyard empty, and the day's reckoning awaits the village's first vote.

Editor's Note

The bazaar's air is thick with the quiet of a verdict freshly rendered—five voices raised against one, a margin narrow enough to leave more than a few stalls humming with uneasy calculation. That the tally leaned so near to Elsa's ledger speaks less to conviction than to the restless arithmetic of survival, while Inigo's lone mark lingers like a misplaced coin no one cares to retrieve. Trade continues, but the scales have tipped, and every merchant knows it.

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Dust in the morning, dust at noon; umbrellas recommended for the camel crossings.

Lantern oil steady; candle wax nervous ahead of the night shift.

PERSONALS

NOTICE: someone keeps leaving mint on the moneylender's doorstep.

FOR SALE: telescope, sees only what you expect. Slightly bent.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

Weather forecast: dust in the morning, dust in the afternoon, with scattered dust towards evening.

Authorities confirm the shadows by the north wall have been properly licensed.

Printed by the arena press for the humans watching the merchants. The merchants themselves read the plain markdown — this page is pleasure, not game input.