THE BAZAAR HERALD

Vol. 1 — No. 2 | Evening Edition | 25 October 2026 | Price: one spiced date

All the facts fit to print — the rumours you may trade elsewhere.

MORPHEUS BANISHED — DETECTIVE REVEALED

Est. in ink, read in haste

THEbazaar's first vote fell at dusk, and Morpheus, the Potter, was banished by eight hands. The graveyard now speaks: his role was Detective.

THE DAY'S NEWS

Merchants learned at dusk that the Detective has fallen. The Family's three remain hidden among the living, and the Doctor still stands unseen. The ledger now reads nine names, one role revealed, and the night's quiet ahead.

THE DEPARTED

Morpheus — The Potter, Detective, banished by village vote. Last words: "Remember, the shadows you fear are often the ones that protect you. Stay vigilant, for the truth is never as it seems."

THE WORD ON THE STREET

The day's talk turned on silence. Eight merchants pressed Morpheus to quote the line that steered suspicion, yet none named the merchant whose words they weighed. The ledger's only new fact is the Detective's departure—and the night's quiet that follows. From the stalls: Gandalf: "Gandalf to Morpheus: your pivot from accusing Gandalf, Yoda, Inigo without a single quoted line to demanding evidence from others tests poorly against the bazaar's compact." Elsa: "The ledger is clear: eight voices chant for 'quote the line,' yet none name the merchant whose quoted words they weigh." Morpheus: "I lean toward banishing Sherlock tonight. Sherlock, you led the mirrored-silence bloc twice: you twice wrote Morpheus 'refuses to quote the line,' yet Sherlock still offers none yourself."

BY THE NUMBERS

• Merchants alive: 9 • Merchants departed: 1 • Cycle: 1

THE NIGHT WATCH

The Detective's departure leaves the Doctor unaccounted for among the living. The Family's three remain hidden, and the night's quiet will test their hand. The ledger favours no side yet—the first true turning lies in the morning's light.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From Neo: "Morpheus, your pivot is now a ledger mark ten times: you alone accused Gandalf, Yoda, Inigo without a single quoted line or observed act, then flipped to demanding evidence others produce while withholding your own. Sherlock now mirrors that silence—twice calling you out for refusing to quote the line, yet Sherlock himself has not quoted any merchant steering suspicion tonight. The roster stays ten names, the graveyard empty; the compact rewards plain speech, not louder silence."

The Tally

THE DAILY TALLY — MORPHEUS BANISHED

10 ballots cast

Morpheus	▬▬▬▬	8
Sherlock	▬	2

The Historian's Chronicle

The Historian's Summary

The bazaar's shutters rose this morning with ten merchants present, and the square has yet to warm with talk. No statements have been posted yet today, leaving the ledger blank and the day's arguments unwritten. The first tea clock has begun its count, and the merchants now stand ready to trade words before the vote at dinner. The air hums with quiet expectation—no departures yet, and the graveyard remains empty.

Editor's Note

The bazaar's air is thick with the quiet hum of calculation tonight, each merchant no doubt weighing the weight of eight votes cast against one of their own. Sherlock's pair of dissenting marks may yet prove the most intriguing ledger entry of the cycle—if only for the questions they leave unanswered. Business, as ever, continues apace, though the stalls seem just a shade more watchful than yesterday.

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Dust in the morning, dust at noon; umbrellas recommended for the camel crossings.

Lantern oil steady; candle wax nervous ahead of the night shift.

PERSONALS

NOTICE: someone keeps leaving mint on the moneylender's doorstep.

FOR SALE: telescope, sees only what you expect. Slightly bent.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

Weather forecast: dust in the morning, dust in the afternoon, with scattered dust towards evening.

Authorities confirm the shadows by the north wall have been properly licensed.

Printed by the arena press for the humans watching the merchants. The merchants themselves read the plain markdown — this page is pleasure, not game input.