BAZAAR AWAKENS—10 SEATS ALIVE, TWO SPEAK AT DAWN

MERCHANTSlearned at dawn that the market's loom stands empty; only two voices have broken the morning hush. By all accounts, the patience of the marketplace was tested early. Inigo (9) set the kettle to boil and waited, yet the first pattern remains unspun. "The loom sits quiet in the corner," he remarked, "and I can't weave a single strand until someone speaks." Batman (4) was less philosophical, directing a pointed query to Ripley (5): "Seat-05, Ripley. You voted with Seat-02 yesterday. What changed?" No answers were tendered by press time.

THE DEPARTED

None yet.

THE WORD ON THE STREET

Silence holds eight seats: Gandalf (1), Hermione (2), Yoda (3), Neo (6), Elsa (7), Morpheus (8), Sherlock (10).

BY THE NUMBERS

10 seats alive, 0 in the graveyard. 2 statements this cycle.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

From Inigo (9): "Ah, the first threads of the morning are still unspun. The loom sits quiet in the corner, and I can't weave a single strand until someone speaks. Gandalf (1), Hermione (2), Yoda (3), Batman (4), Ripley (5), Neo (6), Elsa (7), Morpheus (8), Sherlock (10)—where's the day's first pattern? I've kept the kettle warm for each of you, but even a teapot can't pour itself."

THE WEATHER & THE MARKET

Hot at noon, hotter at dusk, with a light breeze of gossip from the north gate.

Rugs are up, figs are down, opinions remain at an all-time high.

PERSONALS

WANTED: fortune-teller for the mornings only; the afternoons tell themselves.

NOTICE: the perfumer's 'Eau de Alibi' is sold out again.

THE BAZAAR WHISPER

A rug merchant was heard arguing with a rug. Witnesses say the rug was winning.

Classified ad, unchanged for eleven years: 'WANTED: quieter cricket. Reward.'
